KMS Construction Partners with NorthPoint to Build a Healthier Community

Ken McCraley is the owner of KMS Construction in Minneapolis, where he manages all areas including overseeing construction projects. He employs a diverse workforce, many who have been with the company more than 10 years.

What interested you in being a part of the NorthPoint Campus Expansion project?

Ken McCraley: It's important to show the investment that's happening in this community. In the aftermath of the George Floyd murder, folks were looking at different ways to invest in community. When you look at the Northside corridor, the County had already earmarked monies for this project (which was 10-15 years in the making). The campus expansion project has shown how we can look at the community differently. From a pure people perspective, folks will believe in building this community out because they will have high-quality, accessible health care right here in their neighborhood. I think you'll see more investment from local government and the County's investment in the community is going to spur economic growth.

Diversity is a shared value of NorthPoint and KMS Construction. Why is it important to you?

Ken McCraley: I lived on the Northside for a number of years. I'm familiar with the struggles here. My company is a byproduct of the hard work by others over the years on the Northside. I've been in business for 30 years and have been working in healthcare settings for 16 years. Having a diverse workforce is important to me. Some of the folks I hire haven't had the opportunity to work in some areas because of barriers. Construction is one of them. We give them the opportunity to work in this industry.

Our employees live in North Minneapolis neighborhoods. We provide them an opportunity to work in their own community. They receive the training they need to have a good-paying, living-wage job, benefits, and enjoy a higher quality of life. My company is able to build the same commercial buildings in their neighborhoods that other companies have. We just need the opportunity.

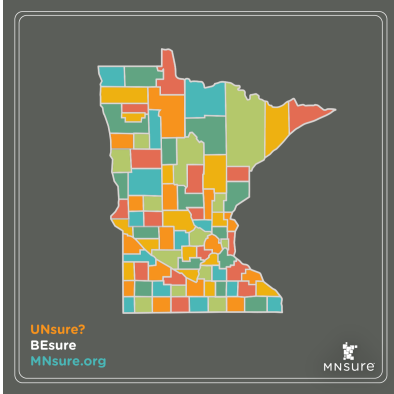

Hennepin County is including companies like mine that have diversity. This is a huge deal. By the end of this project, we're going to show that diverse contractors can create a high-quality build. I believe this will be a blue print, not just here, but across the country, that this is the way to have a quality project, a diverse project.

How do you believe the community will benefit from the NorthPoint expansion?

Ken McCraley: This is an investment in the Northside corridor. It's not a handout. I work in one of the top 20 hospitals in the country on a daily basis. I see the workforce around that hospital and the quality that is expected. If you're a patient, proximity to quality care is everything. If you are a person of color, to be able to see other patients and staff of color, you feel confident you're getting quality care. Every community should have access to that quality of care.

NorthPoint's annual Patient Experience Survey starts December 1. Patients will get a survey after their visits or will be contacted via MyChart. Stay tuned for more details!
